Running to safety

Every year, thousands of children flee to the United States in search of safety and a better life. Many are escaping family abuse, political or religious persecution, or seeking protection from gang violence or recruitment. Others are brought here by adults seeking to exploit them for commercial sex purposes, domestic servitude or other forced labor.

As these unaccompanied children struggle to survive, they often encounter social and cultural barriers that inhibit their success in the U. S. That's when Lutheran Social Services enters the young people's lives and offers them a chance at a stable future. Case-workers set up medical and mental health services, and pro-bono attorneys assist with immigration proceedings. Loving, supportive foster families help these youth learn English, be successful in school, make friends and adjust to life in a new country.
